The distinction is a very broad one. A good talker will entertain a company for a whole evening without drawing on any recources but his own. The others are glad to listen, or, it may be, have no chance to do anything else. Then there are fluent talkers, who think themselves good talkers or monopoliza that talking without stoping to think whether they do it well or ill. These talkers shut out everybody else, but they do not entertain, they bere.

It is probable that in Mr. Gladstone the habit of deing all the talking has grown on him and been encouraged by those so fortunate as to be in his companies.

BRICK PAVEMENTS IN CLEVELAN The New Paving Material Regarded With The following editorial from the Cleve land Leader and Herald of yesterday is of interest to Wheeling people. It shows that the Wheeling revenent is attracting There are really no active forms of diseasy that are peculiar to old sge. The old man has gradually lest the power of withstanding the always acting force of the ear h's attraction, and more and more feebly resisting this force, at last lies down to take his final sleep.

During the progress of this third stage of life the bones are becoming more brittle, the cartileges harder, and the muscles having failed in their tension, all movements are slow, heritaling and more or less uncertain. The skin is losing its soliness, color and elseicity, and falls into folds and winkles. The special senses fail in their refined scuteness. The sye grows duller and the transparent cornea is marked with a white ring, the arcus senilis, or bow of old age; while the one clear pupil is filled with a hezy mist. Taese changes are all preceded by a reduced supply of nervous force, and a weakened memory, resson and volltion.

Although an old person is past the period of falling, a victim to inherited disease, and has long ago ereaped the fatal epidemics of childhood, yet he is less able to withstand a mental or physical strain, and may be readily prestrated by what would have been in earlier years a slight attack of a trivial nature.
